and appreciated your prowess in so many fields of endeavor, in war and in peace. Your career as a combat officer makes us all proud, as do your accomplishments as a lifelong broadcaster, capped by decades of service as a commissioner and chairman of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). They say you can't do it all. You did." (2008).

- Inductee, Broadcasting/Cable Hall of Fame (1995).
- Distinguished Service Award, National Association of Broadcasters (1994).
- Inductee, Museum of Broadcast Communications' Radio Hall of Fame.
- Received a record 41 lifetime achievement and distinguished service awards for his service to the FCC.
- Lifetime contributions were succinctly summarized in the forward to his book by the former Chief Editor of Broadcasting and Cable magazine: "The extraordinary human story of a 'Greatest Generation' survivor who came through six amphibious landings in World War II before surviving six U.S. presidents during 23 ½ embattled years at the FCC—and in the process helped jump-start this information age."
